How to get to Inverness

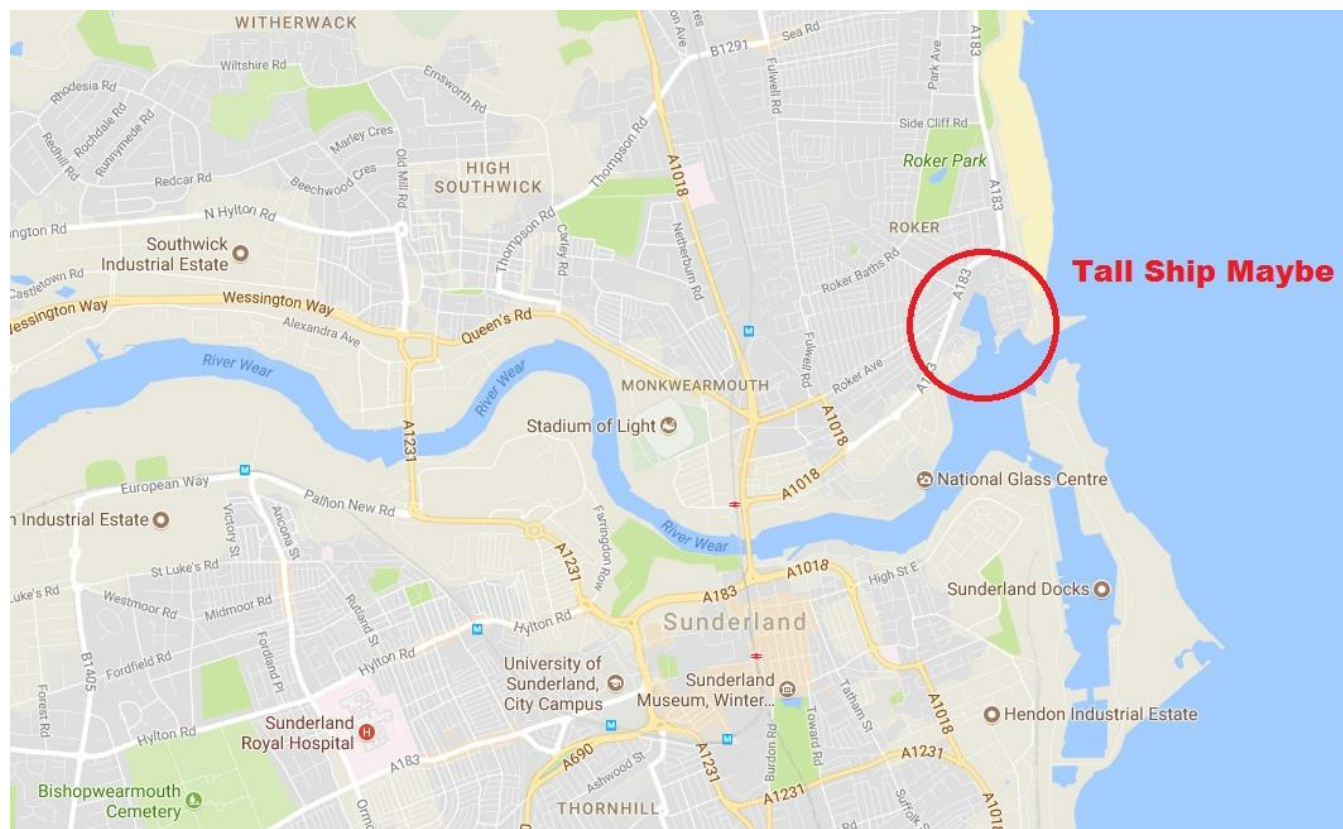

Air – Just 20 minutes drive from the centre of Inverness, Inverness Airport has good links to England, including regular flights to London Gatwick and Luton with easyJet, and to London Heathrow with BA. You can also fly into Inverness with FlyBe from the international hub of Amsterdam Schipol, and there are regular flights from Dublin and Belfast with FlyBe. For more information on available routes please go to the HIAL website.

Rail – Our favourite way of travelling to the Highlands (and environmentally friendly too!) – have a look at The Trainline for details of tickets.

- From Edinburgh – travelling from Edinburgh to Inverness takes around 3 1/2 hours and trains depart (from Edinburgh Waverley or Haymarket) approximately every 1 – 2 hours. If you book in advance you can get a return ticket for around £22 return but, if you purchase a few days before, or on the departure date, prices increase to around £50 – £80 return. This applies to most routes in Scotland so it is definitely worth booking in advance!
- From Glasgow – travelling from Glasgow to Inverness also takes around 3 1/2 hours and trains depart from Glasgow Queen St approximately every 1 – 2 hours. As stated above, if you book your ticket in advance you are much more likely to secure a good price, with this route also starting from around £22 return.
- From London – The Caledonian Sleeper offers overnight rail travel from London – go to sleep in England and wake up in the Highlands! The Caledonian Sleeper leaves London at 2115 daily (2030 on a Sunday) and arrives in Inverness at 0830 the next morning. For those who want a ‘flying trip’ to the Highlands we can collect you from the train station, take you out for a private tour then drop you off back at the station to get the sleeper back to London at 2015 (alternatively, you could stop off in Edinburgh or Glasgow for the evening).

Bus – This is the most cost effective way of travelling to Inverness, but will generally take longer than train or plane, and the standard of the service can vary greatly. Megabus is a budget operator which offers some great deals from London (14 hours – single tickets can be purchased for just £13), Edinburgh (3.5 – 4.5 hours) and Glasgow (3.5 – 4.5 hours). Also available on the Megabus website are tickets to travel with City Link Gold which is a premium coach service available on specific routes. Another option when travelling from England is the National Express coach service.

How to get to Sunderland

Sunderland is situated on the North East coast and is connected to the rest of the UK by excellent road and rail links. It is accessible from the A1(M), the main north-south road link from London and Scotland. Sunderland is a compact city and once you arrive you can travel hassle-free by jumping on one of the the local buses or a Tyne and Wear Metro to get around the city centre, the coast and further afield to Washington and Houghton-le-Spring. Sunderland also has a network of scenic cycle routes and public footpaths that are just waiting to be explored!

Rail

Travelling to Sunderland only takes 3 hours from London Kings Cross on direct trains, which also stop at stations including Hartlepool, Eaglescliffe, Darlington, Northallerton, Thirsk, York and Peterborough.
